B.4 LICENSING AND STATE AUTHORIZATION

States have varying rules, requirements, and regulations that govern online (distance) education offered by non-profit postsecondary institutions. Specifically, when institutions are providing education to out-of-state candidates, higher education institutions that offer distance education to state residents must either register, obtain licensure or certification approval, a letter of exemption, or other certification from the relevant state agencies. For some states where the institution lacks a physical presence, which may be defined differently by the state, the educational institution is not required to obtain authorization. Many of these regulations also apply to field experiences (e.g., internships, practicums, clinicals, etc.) in the state.

Because Reach University is not licensed in all states, Reach may not be able to offer programs to candidates in all states at all times. If a candidate relocates while enrolled, he/she/they shall contact Reach University promptly to determine what the impact may be. Reach University may not be able to offer the same program to a candidate who relocates.

Reach University is registered, licensed, authorized, has a letter of exemption from, or does not have a physical presence for the purposes of licensing or authorization in the states listed below. Information about licensing or exemption in each state can be found by contacting the relevant governmental agency listed below.

Candidates have the right to appeal final institutional appeal decisions, file grievances, and file official complaints directly with their state department.

 A student's location is defined as the primary physical location where the student intends to complete the majority of the work included in their program. A student's location is determined at the time of enrollment, though it can change over the course of enrollment. Relocation to a state where Reach University is not licensed can result in a student being terminated from their program.
